If you play first-person games, which one of the following types of controller do you prefer to use to play them, if you had to choose?

- Keyboard and mouse
- Gamepad.
- Motion controls (e.g. light-gun, Kinect, Move, Wii etc), or other non-traditional controls.
- I would be equally unfamiliar with any of the above.

Think about the last time(s) you played a first-person game (e.g. Call of Duty, Battlefield, Halo, Portal, Dear Esther etc) using {{ collector.conditioncontroller }}. How easy did you find it to use the controls (e.g. to navigate, to look at things, to aim, etc)?

(Please note, this is nothing to do with how easy or difficult you found the game itself - the question is about discovering how intuitive you found the controller to use.)

- I found it extremely difficult to use the controls (or I have never tried playing a first person game using these controls.)

- I found it quite difficult to use the controls.
- I found it neither difficult nor easy to use the controls.
- I found it quite easy to use the controls.
- I found it extremely easy to use the controls.
